Arts center 'open house' draws hundreds

Lycoming opened the doors of its new Fine Arts Center on April 8 for a special "open house." It featured studio demonstrations, a sculpture "pour," and an illustrated talk by one of Pennsylvania's leading architects.

The "open house" attracted several hundred persons to the former Hilltop Gymnasium, which has been completely converted into the arts center. The event ran throughout the afternoon.

The talk by special guest Peter Bohlin, president of Bohlin Powell Lark in Cywinski, an award-winning architectural firm with offices in Wilkes-Barre, Pittsburgh, and Philadelphia, concluded the afternoon. It followed the "pour" in the center's foundry, done by craftsmen from the Johnson Atelier Technical Institute of Sculpture in Princeton, NJ, with whom Lycoming operates a unique B.F.A. in Sculpture program.

Throughout the afternoon, Lycoming students demonstrated their artistic talents in the drawing, painting, figure modeling, sculpture, printmaking, and woodworking studios and the photography laboratory. Lycoming's food service catered to the event.

In his slide-illustrated talk, Bohlin presented a number of the firm's most recent and interesting buildings, including works covered and critiqued by publications such as the New York Times, House and Garden, and the Architectural Record. His firm's reputation for excellence is evidenced by the more than 50 awards presented to it since 1965, including three Silver Medals for Design Excellence from the Pennsylvania Society of Architects, the society's highest award.

The Johnson Atelier offers sculpture students an opportunity to complete a field-specialization apprenticeship during the junior year and over the summers. At the atelier, students learn the technical aspects of sculpting pieces of art work, working with professionals and other student sculptors. After fulfilling the art department's and the atelier's requirements, a bachelor of fine arts in sculpture is awarded.

The "pour" at the open house involved a two-man crew operating the atelier's portable demonstration equipment. The molten bronze was poured into ceramic-shell molds in the foundry's sand pit, which is the former swimming pool. It was the first pour made in the new foundry, which is expected to be in full operation by next fall.

Craftsmen from the Johnson Atelier (above) did a bronze sculpture "pour" while students demonstrated their artistic abilities in front of the watchful eyes of hundreds of visitors at the Fine Arts Center open house on April 8.

Top students honored at annual convocation

Lycoming's outstanding students and student-athletes were feted April 10 at the annual Honors Day convocation in Clarke Chapel. After the convocation, they were guests at a reception in Burnfield Lounge of Wertz Student Center.

Two of Lycoming's top honors, the Chieftain Award, the most prestigious, and the Poabantas Award, the top honor for a female athlete, went to Deanna J. Cappo, a senior mathematics and computer science major from Wappingers Falls, NY. She is president of the student government association (SALC) and was captain of the women's tennis team.

Lycoming's top award for a male athlete, the Tomahawk Award, went to senior Edward M. Cianfaro of Glen Riddle. The accounting major was captain of the men's swimming team.

The Chieftain Award is given annually to the senior who, as a result of a vote of students and faculty, has contributed the most to Lycoming College through support of school activities, who has exhibited outstanding leadership qualities, who has worked effectively with other members of the college community, who has evidenced a good moral code, and whose academic rank is above the median for the preceding senior class.

Lycoming President Dr. Frederick E. Blumer presented the Chieftain to Cappo, who has served on a variety of student, administrative, and academic organizations and committees over four years in addition to SALC. Among her activities were serving as junior class president, chairman of the student judiciary appointment board, student representative to the alumni executive committee and board of trustees, and corresponding secretary for Gamma Delta Sigma sorority.

The Poabantas and Tomahawk Awards recognize credible performance in both the academic and athletic areas and contributions to the college.

Cappo's coach, Deborah Holmes, presented her with the athletic honor. Cappo played No. 1 singles and doubles for four years, winning 40 and losing only 13 matches in that time span. She also was co-captain as a junior.

Swimming coach Dave Hair presented Cianfaro with his award. Cianfaro swam for four years. He holds three of Lycoming's freestyle and butterfly records and is a member of a record-setting medley team. The senior also received an Ethel McDonald Pax Christi Award, which recognizes outstanding but quiet consistency in the life of faith and the practice of Christianity, noteworthy personal integrity and humble loving compassion expressed in daily life.

Another athletic honor, the Sol "Woody" Wolf Award, went to Diane S. Arpert, of Wyckoff, NJ. The junior sociology major was honored for showing the most improvement in intercollegiate competition during the first three years in college. Arpert led the women's basketball team in scoring this year, averaging 22.9 points per game, which ranked her seventh nationally in Division III. She holds the Lycoming records for most points scored in a game (44) and season (413), and is closing in on the all-

President's corner

Following the reception in Washington for area alumni last March, we visited Magnolia Gardens near Charleston, SC, where a commission of the University Senate of The United Methodist Church was to meet the following week. Magnolia Gardens, originally owned by the Rev. John G. Drayton is thought to be the oldest informal English-style garden in America. Its beauty is elegant simplicity.

In the middle of the garden, set into the trunk of an ancient live oak tree overlooking the Ashley River is a bench. The Rev. Drayton claimed that this was the most serene spot on earth, the place where above all others he felt close to God.

It is ironic that within a stone's throw of that bench which was his vista into heaven, there is a small Indian burial ground, older still than the Magnolia Gardens. The Drayton plantation, and Charleston too, were relatively safe in the early colonial period in spite of the Indians, because both were located in a woman's land separating the three principal Indian tribes who originally inhabited the region. It is ironic because the Indians were soon either driven from this enchanted area or simply annihilated.

It is also puzzling to us in this generation that the Rev. Drayton could have felt so close to God sitting on that old bench, sheltered in the niche of a live oak tree while holding so many slaves. It is true that this colonial diviner had defied South Carolina law to educate his slaves, teaching them to read and write in a small school house that still stands. But it is puzzling nonetheless that a slave owner should have been so close to God. Perhaps he was blinded by the dark shadows of that live oak tree.

I sat on that bench trying to capture the quiet serenity of this place so elegantly beautiful. Marsh ducks and the gently flowing Ashley provided the only sounds to interrupt the sublimity of the scene. Even so, I could not recapture the tranquility John Drayton found there. In my mind's eye the image of earth, a rich blue sphere overlaid with giant swirls of white clouds, played counterpoint with the marsh in front of me. Because I have seen the world as the astronauts revealed it, I could not see the world as John Drayton had known it. Both are beautiful beyond description but each image is a world apart from the other. A full moon has never been for me so romantic as it was before man left footprints there and later tracked moon dust on the doormat of Cape Canaveral. The passing of innocence ends but also introduces a lot of blindness. I too can appreciate the dark shadows of a live oak tree that softens the glare of direct sunlight. But having felt the burning heat of the sun as vicariously I walked with astronauts on the moon, I can no longer view the earth as I once did. It's both a shame and a blessing that each generation must be driven from the garden by eating from the tree of knowledge. It was beautiful there on that bench in the dark shadows of a majestic live oak tree.

Gillette Foreign Language Awards, given to the top Spanish, French, and German majors, respectively, went to seniors David G. McLaughlin, of Bryantown, NJ, Patricia M. McDonald, of Blossburg, and Beth A. Gates, of Trenton, NJ.

Leah M. Kuhn, a senior business administration major from Warmstown, received the Wall Street Journal Award which recognizes scholastic excellence, participation in college-community activities, and for exemplifying qualities of business leadership.

Mary Jo Zwisle, a senior mathematics and computer science major from South Williamsport, received the Sadler Prize. It goes to the student with the highest achievement in core mathematics courses. The Ferris Award, another mathematical sciences honor, went to Bruce A. Andren, Jr., a senior computer science and physics major from Troy. It cites the student most active in the major.

The John P. Graham Award, named after the former English faculty member, went to Elizabeth A. Landon, a senior English major from Canton. It recognizes the student with the highest average in courses taken for the major in English.

John D. Callanan, a senior history major from Sullwater, NJ, received the Senior Scholarship Prize in History, which cites outstanding academic achievement in the field, and the Research and Writing Prize in History.

The J. Milton Skeath Award, recognizing superior undergraduate achievement and potential for further study in psychology, went to senior Anne K. McGeorge, a psychology major from Downingtown. The Psi Chi Service Award, another psychology major from Harrisburg, Caldwell, also received an Ethel McDonald Pax Christi Award and the Walter G. McVeer Award, which recognizes outstanding contributions to student life in activities beyond the choir.

The outstanding senior chemistry major award presented by the Susquehanna Valley Chapter of the American Chemical Society, went to W. Michael Reed of Lesterstown. Debra A. Jung, a freshman from Wernersville, received the Freshman Chemistry Achievement Award.

The Civic Choir Award in Music, which recognizes active leadership by carrying out responsibilities and by making a substantial musical contribution, went to Larry D. Estes, a senior business administration and music major from Carlisle. Another music honor, the Mary I. Russell Award, went to Michael J. Morelli, a senior music major from Williamsburg. It recognizes outstanding musical achievement.

The Durkheim Award, presented for academic excellence in sociology, professional promise and service to the department, college and community, went to Kimberly A. Cowles, a sociology and English major from Williamsport.

Theatre department awards recognizing excellence in performance and technical theatre, respectively, went to senior Karen E. Hamm, a theatre and German major from Montoursville, and Matthew P. Ruediger, a junior theatre major from Rydal. Hamm has been a regular performer on

The Excellence in Two-Dimensional Art Award went to Lynn M. Johansen, a senior art and mass communications major from New Milford, NJ, and Ann R. Cotner, a January art graduate from Lovelock Township.

Ronneta S. Rider, a junior psychology major from Liverpool, received the Women of Lycoming Scholarship. It goes to a female junior for academic excellence and financial need.

The Dean of Student Services Award, which cites outstanding contribution to student life through leadership in student activities by a junior male, went to Robert Burger, a biology and psychology major from Nurstown.

Other Ethel McDonald Pax Christi Awards, named in memory of the former secretary in the United Campus Ministry Center, went to John D. Clarke, a senior political science major from Westfield, NJ, and Paul M. Harbaugh, a senior mass communications major from the same hometown.

Scott P. Jensen, a senior mass communications and art major from Delhi, NY, received the Makusu Award, which recognizes outstanding service to the college community for dedication above and beyond the realm of one's obligations in relations to the college. It was presented by the student government association (S.A.C.).

Service to Lycoming Awards, recognizing unselfish service and contribution to student life by a senior during their college career, went to five students: Lynea Anderman, a literature and religion major from Philadelphia; Lisa A. Hollen, a Near East culture and an biology major from Allona; Claire E. Hutchins, an accounting major from Schenectady, NY; M. Michael Peckman, a mass communications major from Pottsville; and Curtis E. Zemenick, a sociology major from Summit Station.

Tapped for IRUSKA Honor Society membership, which is open to seven juniors annually who make significant contributions to campus life in one or more student activities, were Robert Burger, Dawn Deitz, a history major from Collingswood, NJ; Barbara J. Dodd, a mass communications and English major from West Long Branch, NJ; Aren Koldziej, a business administration major from Hiram, NJ; Patricia Loomis, a psychology major from Troy; Brian D. Watson, a psychology major from Easton; and Molly S. Wentz, a mass communications major from Blossburg.

Alpha Kappa Omega sorority and Theta Chi Fraternity received awards for achieving the highest grade point average as Greek organizations during the fall semester.

The Class of 1984 dedicated its yearbook to President Blumer, who they described as "being a guiding force for the class of 1984 and the college, and for his dedication to improving the college and its students."

Yearbooks wanted!

Lycoming College Office of Alumni Relations is seeking donations of yearbooks for the following years: 1942 and 1946.

The yearbooks will allow the office to complete its working copies, which are on file in the office. All donations will be very much appreciated.

Thank you.

Alumnus really into swim of things at Rhody

For Mike Westkott '66, a 24-hour day just isn't long enough.

The problem of not having enough time started in 1970. That's when Westkott began teaching for the Narragansett, RI, school system and coaching a club swim team at the University of Rhode Island (URI).

Westkott got into teaching after earning a degree in business administration from Lycoming and a master's degree in education from URI. His swimming prowess comes from long hours spent in the Lycoming pool as a middle-distance freestyler for the Warriors from 1962-66 and as a summer lifeguard.

In 1973, the Wyomissing native received enough support from students and the athletic department at Rhody to turn the club into a varsity sport for men. In 1975, a women's team was added. Westkott's wife, Pam, assisted him during the initial two seasons of the program. She is now the head swimming instructor at the local YMCA.

Presently, Westkott is a teacher by day and the coach of two—that's right—two division I swimming and diving teams at URI the rest of the time. He is a rarity in his field with 80 to 90 hour work weeks typical during the season (September through March).

Westkott keeps up the grueling pace out of love for the sport. He says he wouldn't have it any other way despite "the dark circles under my eyes."

Westkott loves the opportunity to participate with the kids and see them make progress over the years. He sees it as a sort of therapy, and insists that he receives more out of the program than he gives.

When the team was first established as a varsity sport, no scholarship money was available. Therefore, all swimmers were walk-ons. Eventually, funds were made available to the men. The women still are working without scholarship money.

Mike Westkott '66

In his first year as coach, with 18 to 20 men on the team, Westkott and his swimmers managed wins over established teams such as Boston College and Holy Cross. Now the team has the same number of swimmers, but the quality is better. Westkott believes the men's program is close to achieving his goal of being among the top three schools in New England swimming.

To achieve this type of competitive program, it is essential for Westkott also to spend time recruiting prospective swimmers. His teaching and coaching makes on-the-road recruiting difficult, so he has to do most of it by phone calls and letter writing. He concentrates on the Rhode Island area.

"I found out that I couldn't recruit for both teams at the same time," he says. "There was a need then to concentrate on one team. I went after the men because there was more financial help."

Now that the men are close to where he wants them, Westkott says that he will spend more time developing the women's program.

Overall, the program has received strong support from the athletic department under Westkott's supervision.

"Despite the limitations," he says, "we are still growing." That seems to make the long hours of hard work worthwhile for him.

Rewritten from a story in the Jan. 19, 1984, Providence Journal-Bulletin by Bob Dick.

Faculty focus: Diane Lesko, art historian

As an art historian, Dr. Diane Lesko is a member of a family of historians who examine culture through its art in order to gain a better understanding of that culture.

As a revisionist art historian, Dr. Lesko is conscious of the fact that traditional art history has been concerned with only one half of the population. One illustration of this is the lack of women artists in art history books. Whether on purpose or by oversight, many textbooks ignore women's contributions, she says.

Because these books distort reality, Lesko believes that the problems which have kept women off their pages must be discussed and understood. To this end, she teaches a course at Lycoming titled "Women and Art." In addition, as a speaker for the Pennsylvania Humanities Council, Lesko presents slide-illustrated talks on "Our Neglected Heritage: Women Artists From the Renaissance Through the 19th Century," and "The Nude in Art: Questioning the Litany." The latter examines the male nude in art and questions the traditional assumptions about the female nude in art, both in terms of the past and its role in the future.

Lesko realizes that any change in the literature will come slowly, but her efforts to make others aware of the situation will help to speed up the process of change.

As a serious scholar, Lesko is committed to publishing. Her articles have appeared in such major art journals as Artforum, Arts Magazine, and Art Journal. Her first book—to be published by Princeton University Press—is scheduled to appear next winter. Titled "James Ensor, The Creative Years," it examines the late 19th-century painter who commented on society through macabre images such as skeletons and masks.

As an avid writer herself, Lesko advocates more writing in courses at Lycoming. She is a member of the faculty committee currently working to establish a program that would require some writing in all distribution courses and two writing-intensive courses.

Teaching, however, remains Lesko's first love.

"I love to teach," she says. "I especially love to excite students who don't know anything about art history. It's really rewarding to see the interest in their eyes. In every class, I have students who make it worthwhile."

The new Fine Arts Center also makes her job more enjoyable. She describes the refurbished gymnasium as "light years better" than the two old art buildings on the north side of campus. More importantly, she said, "it's crucial for departmental interaction. Before this, the members of the art department were scattered all over campus."

Lesko actually began studying art as a studio artist and spent a year at the Fashion Institute of Technology in New York City. She found, however, that she missed the rigorous intellectual discipline of academic courses found in a four-year liberal arts institution. After marriage and two children, Lesko enrolled as a returning student at SUNY Binghamton, where she took her first art history course.

The first lecture "opened my eyes," she said. "It was a knockout, and, right then, I set my goal to be an art historian. I liked history before, but it was much more exciting when it was linked to art."

Lesko went on to earn her B.A., M.A., and Ph.D. degrees at SUNY Binghamton. She would like to have studied at other schools also, but her family commitments tied her to Binghamton. While there, she served as curator in the art gallery and taught in the School of General Studies. She also taught at Hartwick College for a year before coming to Lycoming in 1978.

Lesko would like nothing better than to have more people join the art history family. Although Lycoming

Board chairman to receive degree

The chairman of Lycoming's Board of Trustees will receive an honorary degree at the 136th commencement on May 6.

W. Gibbs McKenney '37, of the Baltimore law firm of McKenney, Thomsen, and Burke, will receive an honorary Doctor of Laws degree. Commencement will be held at the flagcourt of the campus quadrangle, weather permitting.

McKenney, 71, has been a trustee since 1964 and chairman of the board since 1976. As a trustee, he has been a guiding force in the life of the college. Most recently, he engineered the acquisition, development, and sale of the LubriKup Corporation, which is responsible for a major share of the growth of the financial strength of Lycoming.

A graduate of Dickinson Seminary, a forerunner of Lycoming, McKenney holds a bachelor of philosophy degree from Dickinson College and a law degree from the University of Virginia's prestigious law school. Since starting his private practice in 1947, he has specialized in taxation, corporate finance, and estates and trusts.

Indeed, McKenney has become so proficient in these legal areas that he is listed in the volume, "The Best Lawyers in America," as one of the finest in these separate fields of practice. He is the only Maryland lawyer to appear in three categories.

The chairman also is the author and editor of a number of widely used publications. The monthly bulletin, "Taxes and Estates," which is circulated by 150 trust companies nationwide to more than 400,000 readers, is his. So are "Minimizing Taxes," a quarterly bulletin prepared for the insurance industry, "The Patron," a quarterly bulletin used by hospitals to attract capital gifts, and "The Educator," a bulletin used by colleges across the country. He co-authors and co-edits the latter.

McKenney also is a frequent lecturer and speaker before trust conventions, seminars, estate planning councils, finance forums, and bar associations. He lectures often at the American University Tax Institute, the Mount Vernon College Tax Institute, and Southern Methodist University.

In addition to serving as a Lycoming trustee, McKenney serves as a trustee at Dickinson College, Goucher College, and Wesley Theological Seminary. He has been a director of Goodwill Industries, the Baltimore Civic Opera Company, the Baltimore Estate Planning Council, and numerous Baltimore corporations, including the Equitable Trust Company, which he counsels on estates and taxes.

Sports

Tennis

The 1984 Lycoming tennis team sandwiched a win between two losses to start off the season. The Warriors opened with a loss to a powerful Scranton club (8-1), then won convincingly over Elizabethtown (6-3). The win was followed by a disappointing loss to Susquehanna (9-0).

Despite the losses, the Warriors should be a lot stronger under second-year coach Joe Mark.

"We have a host of veterans," said Mark. "and hopefully they've all improved over the past year and are ready to work hard to win this spring."

In the win over Elizabethtown, the top Warrior players were sophomore Bruce Mooney (Federalburg, MD) and junior Steve Russell (New Canaan, CT). Both posted victories in singles and doubles matches. Mooney won his singles match 6-3, 6-0 and his doubles match with sophomore John C. Weber (Baltimore, MD) 6-1, 6-0. Russell won his singles match 6-4, 6-1 and with freshman Bill Hammond (Trenton, NJ) won the doubles match 6-2, 6-1.

Other Warriors posting wins against Elizabethtown were senior Jeff Collson (Elmira, NY), 6-4, 3-6, 6-3, and junior Rick Carpenter, 6-2, 6-3.

Against Scranton, the only Warrior victory came from the doubles team of Russell and junior Kevin Curtin (Chatham, NJ). They won 6-2, 6-4.

The Warriors had three of the seven remaining matches on the schedule at home. The Middle Atlantic Conference team championships will be held on April 27 and 28, with the individual championships scheduled for May 4 and 5.

Track & Field

After poor weather caused two early-season cancellations, Lycoming's track and field team finally got to compete in a triangular meet with Dickinson and Albright at Carlisle. The results unfortunately showed the lack of competition and practice time. Lycoming dropped both meets, scoring 46 1/2 points to 76 for Albright and 73 for Dickinson.

The meet was not a total loss, however, as three Warriors qualified for the Middle Atlantic Conference championships at the end of the season. Leading the way was freshman Howard Rane (Jersey Shore), who ran the 440 in 52.2 seconds and long jumped 20-11 1/4 to qualify. He will be joined at the MAC meet by sophomore Mike Kern (Dallas), who threw the shotput 45-1/2, and sophomore Mark Stitler, who threw the discus 125-5. Each scored a first in the tri-meet.

Also taking a first place in the meet was Chuck Cragle, who tossed the javelin 171-10. If weather permitted and he could get in an additional practice time, he also was expected to qualify for the MAC tournament.

Three meets, two of them triangular competitions, remained on the abbreviated spring schedule. The MAC meet will be held at Messiah College on May 4-5.

Golf

The Lycoming golf team was having a hard time getting untracked this spring. Due to poor weather conditions, the team had not even assembled for a practice in early April. Its first four matches were cancelled or postponed.

Capital-area alumni meet for annual reception

Walter '67 and Peggy Giauque Edmonds '69 with their daughter, Pauline.

More than 50 Lycoming alumni from the Washington, D.C. club gathered in the Rayburn Building on Capitol Hill in mid-March for their sixth annual spring reception.

Planned again by Charles J. Kocian '50 and his wife, Jean, the event included a ham and chicken buffet dinner with all the trimmings. Entertainment was provided by Walter '67 and Peggy Giauque Edmonds '69 and their nine-year-old daughter, Pauline, who sang a medley of songs. It is the second consecutive year they have sung at the reception.

The alumni relations office also showed a slide show on Lycoming, featuring some recent changes on campus. And Lycoming President Dr. Frederick E. Blumer spoke.

Joining the President at the reception were his wife, Ann, Ralph E. Zeigler, Jr., 70, director of alumni relations; Dale V. Bower '59, director of planned giving; William H. Rupp, director of public relations; Dr. Howard C. Berthold, Jr., associate professor of psychology, and several students.

For their efforts in planning the annual reception and in organizing and sustaining the Washington, D.C. club, the Kocians were surprised with a gift of a Lycoming clock by the alumni office. It was presented by Dr. Blumer at the close of the reception.

President Blumer presents gift to Charles J. Kocian '50 and his wife, Jean.

The House transportation and public works committee room (below) was the scene of the annual D.C. alumni reception.

Choir to tour New England

New England is the site of the annual spring tour of Lycoming's renowned Tour Choir this year, with seven concerts planned in eight days.

Scheduled for April 27 to May 4, the week between the end of spring semester and commencement, the tour takes the choir to northeast Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and New York. The entire trip will be by bus.

The first stop on the tour is at Central United Methodist Church in Honesdale on April 27 for an evening concert. The choir then drives to Wethersfield, CT, for an evening concert on April 28 at Wethersfield United Methodist Church.

On Sunday evening, April 29, the choir travels to Old Mystic, CT, for a concert at Old Mystic Baptist Church.

Monday, April 30, finds the choir in West Springfield, MA, for an evening performance at First Congregational Church. On Tuesday, May 1, the troupe is in Concord, NH, for an evening concert at South Congregational Church.

The choir has an open day planned for Boston on Wednesday, May 2, when sightseeing in the historic city tops the day's agenda of activities. They will spend the night at the Copley Square Hotel, with a dinner planned for the Durgin Park Restaurant early that evening.

Early in April, the choir was still looking for a concert on Thursday, May 3, specifically at a site on the road to Delhi, NY. The choir performs at SUNY at Delhi on Friday evening, May 4, sponsored by the United Ministry of Delhi. After that performance, the choir returns to the campus to prepare for Lycoming's commencement on Sunday, May 6.

The choir is directed this year by Catherine Payne, visiting instructor in the music department, who is filling in for Dr. Fred M. Thayer, Jr., who is on a sabbatical in Spain. The 40-member group is selected by competitive audition from the larger 70-voice concert choir.

The New England tour continues a tradition of traveling to one of the four compass points each spring for a series of performances. In recent years, the Tour Choir has traveled down the southern coast to Florida; to the Midwest; to Puerto Rico; and around the East Coast. Since the choir's inception in 1947, it has performed in every state east of the Mississippi River and in England and Canada.

To prepare for the spring tour, the choir performed several concerts in the northcentral region and took a weekend tour to southcentral Pennsylvania.

does not offer a major in art history; a minor is available, and interdisciplinary majors combining art history and history, foreign language, or even business are possible.

When Lesko isn't teaching or writing or speaking, she plays tennis. She describes her game as that of a "true amateur." Lesko also likes to travel, and is considering taking a course in Italy next summer.

Convinced that all art students need to experience art first hand, Lesko organizes the student trips to metropolitan art galleries and museums each semester. Her May term course, Art on the East Coast, involves travel to museums in Washington, Philadelphia, and New York City.

Lycoming's renowned Tour Choir prepared for New England tour.

LYCOMING COLLEGE REPORT

Snow outside, but tropical island inside

More than 12 inches of freshly fallen snow lay on the quadrangle outside of Wertz Student Center on March 31. But inside the building, it was a tropical island. Well, almost.

The event was a Polynesian festival sponsored by the Campus Activities Board (CAB). It brought a taste of the South Seas to Lycoming two days after an early spring blizzard blanketed the campus in a foot of the white stuff.

Exotic Polynesian foods were served at the seven-course luau by students dressed in authentic costumes. The food was prepared by CAB members and brothers and sisters of Tau Ikaika, Ekele, and Ahihi, all Omega fraternities.

Dances and other entertainment followed. The event featured a troupe of Polynesian dancers and musicians from New York City, entertained. Also, Hawaii native Diane Hughes, wife of Dr. Richard A. Hughes, associate professor of religion at Lycoming, danced the hula and led several diners in the traditional dance.

The luau was held in the game room of the student center, which was decorated with a variety of large and small plants and flowers arranged by the local Duboisstown Garden Club. Students also created backdrops of ocean scenes, Hawaii's famous Diamondhead, and a small running waterfalls.

More than 200 faculty and student members and students attended the festival, which CAB billed as the Malakiki Festival in the honor of the God of Day, Akua 'O Amu, on the beaches of Waietabaki.
